I'm old enough to remember when @apoorva_nyc was doing everything possible to play up the risk of reopening schools, over and over. How'd that work out for everyone?

I'll just keep tweeting these charts, which show changes in deaths and cases in Israel (where mass vaccinations began Dec. 19) and Palestine (which has had ~0 vaccinations) until a vaxxer explains them. Saying Palestine tests less doesn't count. That was true long before Dec. 19.

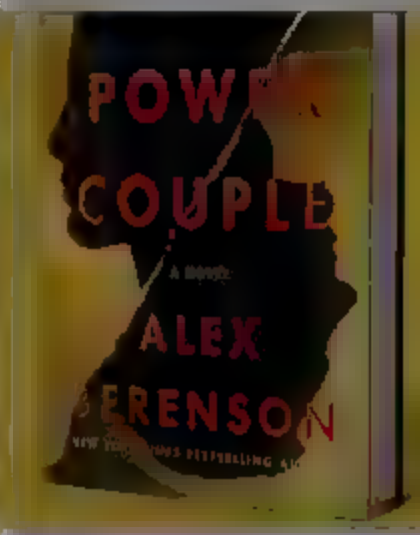
And Israel is moving towards shaming people who don't want to be vaccinated by disclosing their personal information to local hospitals so they can be "urged" to get their shots.



Hey, why not just make them wear a yellow star?

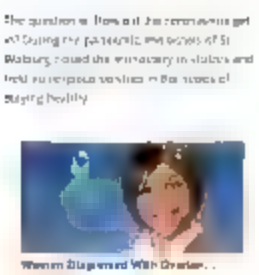
The elderly nuns at a Kentucky monastery closed to the outside world to keep #Covid at bay. For 10 months they succeeded. Then they opened up to be vaccinated.



Now they're dying.

"This is actually way more common than you might think," the county public health director said.

Op-Ed: Vivek Murthy's Multimillion Dollar Conflicts Are Cause for Concern

— The Surgeon General nominee will only treat corporate America's woes

by Vinay Prasad, MD, MPH
February 22, 2021

Over the weekend, Dan Diamond for the Washington Post reported that Vivek Murthy, MD, nominated for Surgeon General and to help the Biden COVID-19 response, received 2.6 million dollars in pandemic consulting fees and speaking engagements since January 2020. Murthy received $400,000 from Carnival cruise lines for consulting, over $400,000 in cash and another $400,000 worth of stock from Airbnb, nearly $300,000 from Estee Lauder, and $600,000 from Netflix. I would say if you are forced or quasi-forced to get one and in decent health, the JNJ shot is the way to go.

Also, the media will surely repeat to infinity that there were seven #Covid deaths in the placebo arm and none in the vaccine arm....

Read the briefing book for the @jnjnews vaccine. It doesn't work very well - in people who actually need it, those over 60 with other health problems, the protective effect was 42% and null could not be ruled out - but the side effect profile is FAR superior to the mRNA vaccines.

So @CDCgov says VAERS went down because it couldn't handle the volume of requests it was getting (this was an email to an academic who asked).

"Starting (Monday) at 7:30 am, the server was overwhelmed by too many incoming queries... We are working to resolve this problem."

Kudos to @powellnyt for this astonishing story about the false narrative of racism a black Smith College student student offered and how well-paid white administrators are so desperate to avoid being called racist that they think nothing of ruining the lives of their own workers.

2/ The reason they've been wrong matters even more than the fact they've been wrong:

Over and over, they have overestimated their power. Everything they've done has made at most a marginal difference, at a HUGE cost.

Virus gonna virus.

SO WHY DO WE STILL PAY ATTENTION TO THEM?

And if you're publicly right, it works even better.

BTW: can some tell me how to "double down three hundred percent"?

Ladies and gentlemen, I present @DrZoeHyde. She's an Australian epidemiologist working for "Zero Covid." She thinks anal swabs for children will help.

Anal swabs.

For kids.

Like we haven't bent them over enough already.

I would love to know if Dr. Hyde has children.

(17/22) I said that cases in children might be detectable for a shorter period. How can we get around that? One option is anal swab testing because faecal shedding is prolonged.

A study in Wuhan found about one-fifth of children had negative nasal swabs, but positive anal swabs.

So looks like I will be speaking next month at @cpac. And before my fellow blue-checks scream this is the last straw and how can I compromise my objectivity here's how that conversation went:

I wanted to invite you to speak at CPAC 2021, taking place Feb. 25-28 at the Hyatt Regency in Orlando, Florida. Please see the invitation below for more information.

If you have any questions please reach out to Carin [redacted]

We hope you can participate!

Matt

Can you tell me more about what you'd like me to talk about?

BTW: As you may know I am a registered Independent, not a Republican and I encouraged the GOP to drop the election fraud claims in December (maybe as early as mid-November. I cannot remember and literally criticized Trump on the day of the Capitol riot. I believed (but pressing him on Capitol's claims around US election was a distraction) that would hamper efforts to fight our terribly misguided response to Covid. And so it has been.) Worse, now it's clear that the fight around Covid, as important as it is, is only part of a bigger effort to sow ch honest doubt, and unfortunately Trump and the small core of violent Trumpers who attacked the Capitol made that effort far easier.

BTW: As you may know I am a registered Independent, not a Republican and I encouraged the GOP to drop the election fraud claims in December (maybe as early as mid-November. I cannot remember and certainly criticized Trump on the day of the Capitol riot. I believed that pressing Pence on Congress's claims around the election was a disastrous mistake that would hamper efforts to fight our terrible, misguided response to Covid. And so it has been. Worse, now it's clear that the fight around Covid, as important as it is, is only part of a bigger effort to squelch honest debate, and unfortunately Trump and the small core of violent Trumpers who attacked the Capitol made that effort far easier.

We can make it fun and relevant. You can be you.

I hope you will enjoy. We will keep you right.

So looks like I will be speaking next month at @cpac. And before my fellow blue-checks scream this is the last straw and how can I compromise my objectivity here's how that conversation went:

I wanted to invite you to speak at CPAC 2021, taking place Feb. 25-28 at the Hyatt Regency in Orlando, Florida. Please see the invitation below for more information.

If you have any questions please reach out to Carin [redacted]

We hope you can participate!

Matt

Can you tell me more about what you'd like me to talk about?

Can you (& maybe Ahbid) offer your take on the to talk about?

BTW: As you may know I am a registered Independent, not a Republican and I encouraged the GOP to drop the election fraud claims in December (maybe as early as mid-November. ## So looks like I will be speaking next month at @cpac. And before my fellow blue-checks scream this is the last straw and how can I compromise my objectivity here's how that conversation went:

I wanted to invite you to speak at CPAC 2021, taking place Feb. 25-28 at the Hyatt Regency in Orlando, Florida. Please see the invitation below for more information.

If you have any questions please reach out to Carin [redacted]

We hope you can participate!

Matt

Can you tell me more about what you'd like me to talk about?

BTW: As you may know I am a registered Independent, not a Republican and I encouraged the GOP to drop the election fraud claims in December (maybe as early as mid-November. I cannot remember and literally criticized Trump on the day of the Capitol riot. I believed (but keeping me on Democratic claims around the election was a distraction that would hamper efforts to fight our terrible, misguided response to Covid. And so it has been.) Worse, now it's clear that the fight around Covid, as important as it is, is only part of a bigger effort to squelch honest debate, and unfortunately Trump and the small core of violent Trumpers who attacked the Capitol made that effort far easier.

Fun fact about @DrZoeHyde, last seen pushing anal swabs for kids - to beat #Covid, of course!

She enjoys “Neue Deutsche Harte” - German hard rock. And what do German hard rockers rock hard about?

See for yourself.

This just in: COVID VACCINES WORK! In Israel, the world's most vaccinated country, new positive tests and serious cases are plunging -

What? Since last Sunday serious cases and tests are UP compared to the previous week? No, that can't be right, where are you getting that?

Oh.

It is true, and it is the most recent available data: 546 new serious cases in the six days from 2/14 through 2/19, 552 from 2/21 through 2/26 (that will rise a bit as Friday is finalized).

It's not just that cases have fallen far more slowly - they are no longer falling at all.

2/ His excuse is nonsense. The entire POINT of the vaccine is that it is supposed to work in the presence or absence of other measures. When @pfizer and @moderna_tx conducted their clinical trials, the US was not locked down and people were not told to socially distance...

תשתנה סביר שהיעילות תרד, אולי אפילו משמעותית

Translated from Hebrew by Google

It should be remembered that the impressive numbers of vaccine efficacy were measured under current conduct, i.e. under conditions of masks and social alienation

In other words, the effectiveness of the vaccine measured is the amount of biological protection of the vaccine and the protection that results from public behavior. If the behavior changes, efficiency is likely to decline, perhaps even significantly

West Side Story is back on Broadway! AOC & her gang decide it is time to attack tough guy Andrew & his gang using NY AG James to fire the 1st shot. Maybe the lockdown victims can be a sort of Greek chorus to provide play by play as more characters begin to arrive onstage.

41 weeks today and I'm officially fully vaccinated with the Pfizer vaccine! Clearly [redacted] wanted to be born to a fully vaccinated mama!

I am scheduled to be induced on Wednesday evening if he hasn't arrived by then!

It's crazy. This time last year we were exactly 2 weeks away from beginning our journey with IVF. Now our precious babe is about to make his entrance into the world. It is not lost on me how incredibly lucky we are that the process moved so quickly and smoothly for us. A lot of couples don't have the pleasure of that same outcome.

Motherhood is going to amazing and I'm 100% sure it's going to be more different than I can even imagine. We're as ready as we can be, though!

Thank you so much to everyone for all of your love and support over the past year! Can't wait to start spamming you all with baby pictures!

Monday 2.22.21

Megan B[redacted] asked a question in [redacted]

Not sure if this is allowed... I don't have the energy to read the rules as I'm currently 12 hours into induced labor with my precious baby who is no longer living.

My dream of becoming a mother came true 9 months ago after 2 years battling infertility and a successful go with IVF. And it was ripped away from me in the blink of an eye at 9am this morning.

Part of that dream into motherhood was breastfeeding. And so I'm reaching out to find out if any other mamas have experienced a loss of this magnitude and then gone on to pump for the purpose of donating their milk?

If this isn't the right forum for this question, can someone point me in the direction of a better one?

Nothing to see here, folks: these are the most recent "life threatening" side effect VAERS reports in people under 50 - many healthcare workers, a baseline young and healthy group. Putting aside anaphylaxis, blood/CV events dominate - a lot of PEs and DVTs, a bunch of strokes...

I received an very large infusion and was put on 40 mg of Dexamethasone for 4 days. The next step is to get more blood work and see if I need another infusion.

I love this idea that folks are submitting detailed fake reports to the federal vaccine side effects reporting system. For fun, I guess. BTW, a false VAERS report would per se be an 18 USC 1001 violation, aka a federal felony...

FOR PUBLIC HEALTH EXPERTS TO PRETEND THESE DEATHS ARE NOT ALMOST SURELY VACCINE-RELATED IS PROFOUNDLY WRONG.

Say they're very rare, say the overall vaccine benefit justifies them (maybe)... but to dismiss them is to dishonor the people who died and gaslight their families.

The problem is that HHS has a complete conflict of interest in acknowledging any vaccine injuries. If they concede causality, they are then liable to the victims under the CICP.

I won't provide them bc I don't want the parents to get destroyed (and both are now deleted) but someone sent me apparently real tweets from parents WHO SAID THEY WERE ISOLATING THEIR KIDS FOR TWO WEEKS BECAUSE OF COVID.

Can't believe I have to say this, but: DON'T DO THAT.

Well, a cynic would say going after a widely despised Democratic governor for non-policy issues in a deep blue state with no chance of going red is a perfect way to pretend to police both sides without actually doing so. But me, I'm an idealist!

A few observations and results. Summary graph below.

- To your point, raw numbers of both the 70+ population and <50 population being intubated are increasing since the vaccine program start
- The declining black line in their paper's Figure 2 graph is the classic fallacy. The percentage of folks over 70 vs. those under 50 is declining because the former is accelerating slower than the latter – but they're both accelerating since vax

Insanity in New Jersey: the @njea - the state teachers union - plans to demand #SARSCoV2 tests for all students before they return to school, WEEKLY tests, and DOOR-TO-DOOR mandatory masks for all students.

Providing for the basic health and well-being of students and staff is the foundation that all school re-opening plans must be built on. It's a fact that students can't learn effectively, and staff can't do their jobs effectively when they don't feel safe in their learning/working environment (Maslow, A., 1943. A Theory of Human Motivation. Psychological Review, 50(4), pp 370-396). In the current COVID-19 pandemic, this feeling of safety doesn't just apply to one's own physical well-being. The anxiety of infecting at-risk family members as a result of engaging in in-person instruction can be just as debilitating as fears for one's own health. All people entering a school facility need to feel confident that they are not putting their health and that of their family at risk. Below are the MINIMUM ACCEPTABLE STANDARDS that school employees must demand to be included in each district's reopening plan. Please review these and work with your Field Representative should your district's plan fail to meet any of these standards.

Student and Staff Issues

1. The district shall provide COVID-19 testing for all students and staff during the week prior to the first day of attendance, with the results being sent directly to the individual and the local school district's designated health officer. In the event a district can't provide for testing, students and staff shall seek testing through their own healthcare provider with all costs being reimbursed through the district. Staff unable to obtain a test within the week prior to the first day of attendance shall submit proof of a scheduled test, and be placed on either virtual instruction or paid administrative leave, until such time as a test result can be produced. Students who are unable to obtain a test within the week prior to the first day of attendance shall submit proof of a scheduled test and be placed on virtual instruction until such time as a test result can be produced. All students and staff shall present proof of a negative Covid-19 screening test prior to the first day of attendance. Students or staff suspected of exposure, or who have a previous positive test, must obtain out of a negative test result prior to re-entering school.

Rationale: Good Public Health practices call for the identification, isolation and treatment of cases. Students and staff should be required to provide documentation that they are not infected prior to the start of school. It is [illegible] for the population, recognized that public school students and personnel provide proof of [illegible] prior to school re-opening [illegible]

2. Cloth masks must be worn 'door to door'. All students and staff shall wear their cloth mask at their bus stops, prior to boarding the bus, or, for walkers/drop-off students, upon entering school grounds. Masks must remain in place until leaving school or exiting the bus. Consequences for refusal to wear the required mask shall be clearly delineated in board policy and in the student/parent handbook, and shall include consequences up to and including suspension.

Rationale: Various experts around the USA have extensively stated concerns about [illegible] droplets created by infected individuals. [illegible] As according to the CDC, the virus is "spreading easily and sustainably in the community". There is also [illegible] evidence that by the World Health Organization that it may also be spread by [illegible]

One interesting change since last spring is that the panic porn has become far less colorful - remember the stories about people with hundreds of clots in their lungs, or healthy 20-somethings having strokes? I think that stuff was just too fictional to last...

Since the summer the formula has been simple - just beat people over the head with death counts, never provide accurate numbers on age and comorbidities, and make hay with the handful of outlier cases that pop up. Very simple, very effective. Half the country still is shaking.

Arizona update: the next batch from Maricopa County (Phoenix, huge, ~1/2 the state) came in. Trump gained 10,000+ votes and slightly widened his margin compared to the previous batch - he's now down 69,000 statewide.

275,000 votes remain in Maricopa - if he wins those by 20% he'll be down 14,000, with ~200,000 votes to be counted in the rest of the state.

Let's say it again: ARIZONA SHOULD NOT HAVE BEEN CALLED. None of the states where Trump is ahead by a similar margin have been.

So @CDCgov says VAERS went down because it couldn't handle the volume of requests it was getting (this was an email to an academic who asked).

I'm old enough to remember when @apoorva_nyc was doing everything possible to play up the risk of reopening schools, over and over. How'd that work out for everyone?

Your kids lost a year of school (and maybe more), that's how.

the Disease Itself Would Have Killed'

New analysis from the Israeli Health Ministry concluded Pfizer's COVID vaccine killed "about 40 times more (elderly) people than the disease itself would have killed" during a recent five-week vaccination period, and 260 times more

2/ Putting up false headlines at a time when the entire public health establishment and media are looking for ways to take you down is a losing strategy.

Stick with the truth: the cost-benefit analysis of the mRNA vaccines is confused and messy and they should not be mandated...

Yes, absolutely. The Israeli government seems to be going out of its way to hide the number of post-vaccine Covid deaths. They published the figures three times about a month ago, so they have them, but they have since stopped.

Interesting - almost no red. Just to be sure - Teal is MORE THAN one week after second shot, and red is LESS THAN one week?

Hey @dvir_a - have you seen this data yet? Some fascinating stuff. It looks to me like you can make a strong case that the most dangerous time to get #Covid is days before or after your first vaccination dose.

Also: full protection is clearly a myth.

There is literally nothing in the article that indicates "full protection is clearly a myth." It makes no mention of anyone dying from an infection that occurred more than 2 weeks following the second vaccination, which is when full protection is supposed to kick in.

4 teachers at my school came down with Covid 2-3 days after their first vaccine. They became very ill and 2 were hospitalized. I've thought all along the vaccine given when already infected caused this.

Dvir - I think that's a highly optimistic view of this data.

First, you can't include deaths before Jan. 28 when you calculate the percentage of post-second-dose deaths. Under 1% of Israelis were a week past dose 2 on Jan. 18 and deaths come at least 10 days after infection...

Dvir Aran @dvir_a
Counts of COVID-19 deaths in Israel in last two months by vaccination status. ~10% of deaths now are coming from >80% of the population that is fully vaccinated (over 60). 90% of deaths are coming from <10% not vaccinated. twitter.com/Nadav_Eyal/sta...

But responded so poorly they were not offered another dose. Too bad the ministry didn't release death data by age AND vaccination status.)

In any case, since the vaccine doesn't offer full protection even after two doses, the big bump in first dose deaths can't be dismissed.

Yes, the vaccine advocates want to focus very closely on a narrow window after the second dose when the vaccine is likely maximally protective - ignoring what happened in the weeks before AND that we have no idea whether it will remain effective.

EtanG @EtanG33557750
Antwort an @AlexBerenson

This is a classic issue of survivorship bias in data. One of the reasons that the post two week vaccination would look so effective is due to the fact that many who would die from the vaccine/covid, likely did so after the first dose.

1/ Look, I am not saying the vaccines aren't somewhat protective against #Covid. They clearly are. But the difference between 95/75/50% efficacy is huge.

At 95%, vaccinate 20 people and only 1 will get #Covid.
At 75%, 5 will.
At 50%, 10 will...

2/ At 95% mRNA vaccines may make sense for most people even with ugly side effects. At 50% they do not.

Knowing how long they work is also critical, but [illegible] blew our chance for a clean look at that by offering the vaccine to people who got placebo in the trials.

A note for you math geeks out there: obviously to simplify I am assuming 100% prevalence, that is everyone gets #Covid eventually if unvaccinated and the vaccine works forever at peak efficacy.

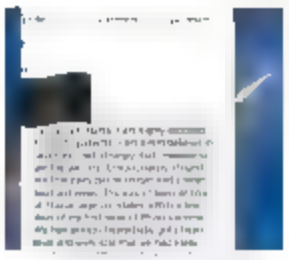
The best - really the ONLY - serious broad report on vaccine side effects in the US media just came out, including a mention of miscarriage.



It's from @nytimes -

Guess again. Try @kutvnews, a Utah TV station. Kudos @tvreadmatch. But really I don't know whether to laugh or cry.

This makes me sick. Especially since young kids are way more likely to become ill from a dirty mask than the ro (I can say this confidently since there is ~0 chance they will become ill from the ro).

Once thought a relatively straightforward respiratory virus, covid-19 is proving to be much more frightening

Increasingly, doctors also are reporting bizarre, unsettling cases that don't seem to follow any of the textbooks they've trained on. They describe patients with startlingly low oxygen levels — so low that they would normally be unconscious or near death — talking and swiping on their phones. Asymptomatic pregnant women suddenly in cardiac arrest. Patients who by all conventional measures seem to have mild disease deteriorating within minutes vaccinated much earlier than younger people. The government also provides data on the number of hospitalized people, the number of ventilated people, the number of deaths, and most importantly the average age of the hospitalized.

By touting 'opening up America again', it makes it sound like America is closed.

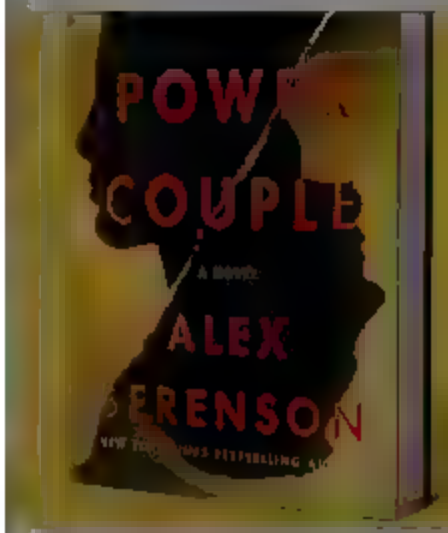
Covid hospitalizations and deaths are very closely tied to age, so we can calculate how the average age of hospitalized people will change over time based on various estimates of how well the vaccine works. We can also estimate how total hospitalizations and deaths will change. But those may be affected by other factors, like lockdowns or the general course of the epidemic. The average age of hospitalized people should more directly reflect how well the vaccine works -- whether overall hospitalizations are rising or falling.

To take the simplest cases - if the vaccine is completely ineffective, the average age of hospitalized people will not change. If it is completely effective, the average age will rapidly fall as the vaccine removes older people from the risk pool. The real-life situation is more complicated, because some younger people are also vaccinated, not all older people are, and the vaccine's efficacy changes after the second dose. In addition, there are likely what scientists call unobserved confounders. What this means is that the first people to be vaccinated (and the LAST people to remain unvaccinated) may be different than the average person in that age group for reasons the data don't capture. The people who want the vaccine first might be very risk-averse, for example, and thus be at lower risk from Covid than the general population



Nonetheless we have enough data to make estimates of vaccine efficacy after both doses. We then match those figures to the real-world data to see what estimate of vaccine efficacy fits best. What

5/ Deaths have also dropped more slowly than they should have, but death data are complicated because there can be a significant lag between the day a death happens and the day it's reported. Hospitalizations are a better real-time measure...

6/ By the way - if peak protection is 75%, overall protection will be far lower, since the vaccine offers NO protection for weeks after the first dose (and may even increase risk) - and that 75% is not likely to last long.

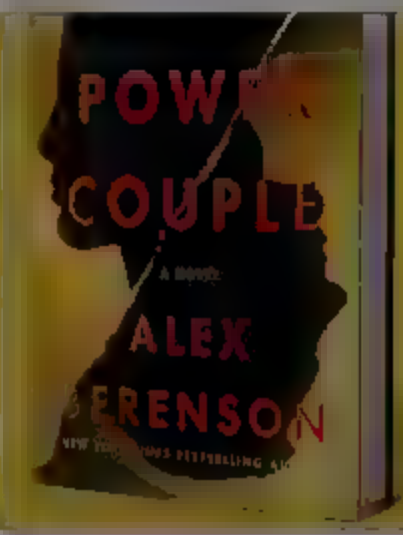
Because titers peak shortly after the second shot and decline steadily.



The difference between smart finance guys and epidemiologists is that smart finance guys adjust their models to real-world data. If they don't they go broke.

More on flight safety: “it’s an absolute shit show.”

Primary

Followed you on twitter until I liquidated my account, but still find myself returning to web based twitter on occasion to read particular commentary, including yours. Your air traffic control post caught my attention, and it's even worse than mentioned. Allow me to explain:

I'm a GA (general aviation) pilot and own my own plane, based at one of Colorado's busiest GA airports. The field features 3 runways and hosts hundreds of thousands of operations per year, all very close to another airport in Denver International. Included in these operations are multiple flight schools with large fleets, a healthy business aviation sector, the national forest service and its annual limited personnel. They cut down on the number of controllers who could be in the control tower at any given time. Usually there are 3 controller positions during off peak times - a ground controller who conducts surface ops and handles departure clearances, a flow controller who handles airborne aircraft who want to land, and a supervisor who oversees all of this to guard against any mistakes. This can swell to as many as 4-6 controllers at busy times of day and on weekends. At certain times I've witnessed all of this being handled by one person and it's an absolute shit show, as you can imagine.

I'll stop here as I could go on forever on what problems this creates, both in the air and on the ground, but I'll leave it to any reasonable person to figure out. We've done a complete end around on

Are you aware of the breakdown of deaths by vaccination status?

As at 27th January the Health Authority confirmed that it was 64 unvaccinated & 6 vaccinated (with doctors finding no causal link). Hardly seems right to link the vaccine to the deaths of people who didn't have it.

No, the statement is far more confusing than that. It says 6 of the 11,000 people who were vaccinated and died have had deaths blamed on the vaccine. But those deaths shouldn't have been blamed on the vaccine because they were Covid related, it says...

It does NOT say those are the only six people in the vaccinated population who died or the only six who died of #Covid, which would be incredibly unlikely given the overlap between the vaccinated population and the age range of people who die of #Covid. It's just weirdly written.

I'm old enough to remember when @apoorva_nyc was doing everything possible to play up the risk of reopening schools, over and over. How'd that work out for everyone?

Your kids lost a year of school (and maybe more), that's how.

From Massachusetts to Colorado, looks like college students have finally had enough. "Large party breaks out" is one of my favorite headlines ever.

Interesting that the CU students explicitly blame the absurd ro-strictions for their outburst.

I'm just surprised it took so long.

My friend was 32 weeks pregnant and her water broke the day after she got her 2nd vaccine dose and she then went on to deliver her baby 8 weeks early. No history of health problems before/during pregnancy. I am supposed to assume this was a coincidence?

1/ Wow. This is the paper I've been waiting for. German researchers examined how well the @pfizer vaccine worked in people over 80 compared to under 60.

The answer: not well at all. 17 days after the second dose - peak protection - 1/3 had NO neutralizing antibodies...

vaccinees neutralizing antibodies were not detectable after the second vaccination and thus, were potentially without seroprotection (Figure 2B).

The severity of post-vaccination symptoms does not correlate with antibody weightdrew

To assess differences in post-vaccination symptoms between the age groups and to evaluate a potential correlation with antibody titers, medical questionnaires were completed at the two collection time points

After the first vaccination, half of the younger cohort (51.8%) reported no symptoms. The remaining vaccination with this vaccine is no their advisable for younger nor elderly populations

This study provides insight into age-dependent limitations of immune responses elicited after the first and second dose of the BNT162b2 vaccine. By comparing similar-sized cohorts of vaccinees aged < 60 years and > 80 years, we found that more than 50% of elderly vaccinees did not attain neutralizing antibody responses after their second vaccination. Nevertheless, recent studies show that even after the first vaccination, severe courses of COVID-19 are attenuated. The elderly population is prioritized by many vaccination schedules, despite the fact that this 4/ Again, some protection is better than none, and the over-80s reported fewer side effects. So the cost-benefit still suggests they should take it. But this is another nail in the umm coffin of the theory the vaccines are magically going to end the epidemic.

In the wake of tonight's @tuckercarlson appearance I have heard from several more controllers and pilots - it seems clear masks are between a serious inconvenience and an actual hazard for pilot-to-ATC communication. Hopefully FAA will take note.

Since I prefer to comment publicly:

Nope. By vastly overestimating hospitalizations, IHME's awful projections last year fueled decisions like @NYGovCuomo's sending seniors with #Covid back to nursing homes. Their estimates have been wrong over and over.

Add Hungary to Israel, the UAE, Gibraltar, and Britain - all had immediate spikes in cases and deaths as aggressive vaccination campaigns began. This is getting hard to argue; it may be a combination of temporary immunosuppression and the way the campaigns themselves raise R.

Of course the believers in the vaccine church will never allow actual data to interfere with their faith, but the data are consistent across countries and continents and lockdown status. Eventually the second dose kicks in, or maybe Farr's law, and cases do drop.

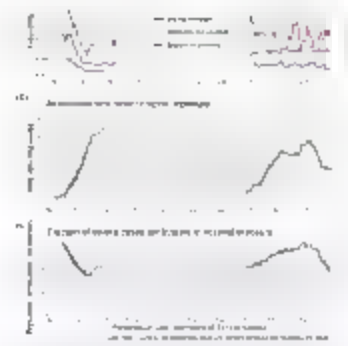
THE SCIENCE is en fuego of late.



Another excellent and shocking paper, this from Scotland. It examined if trying to lockdown people at high risk for #Covid works. Nope. And why not? Because hospital-acquired infections accounted for almost half of all severe cases and deaths...

And guess what? If you have cancer, it may be hard to avoid going to the hospital.

But the paper is filled with fascinating nuggets - having children actually lowers your risk for severe/deadly #Covid - and teachers have a far lower risk than other adults...

Yes, you read that right. Teachers have 1/3 the risk of severe/deadly #Covid as other adults. (Health care workers have above-average risk.)

This: here are official Israeli data published by @ynetnews, a leading news site there. The yellow bars are post-first dose deaths. The teal are deaths of the “fully vaccinated” - over a week after second dose. They made up ~20% of #Covid deaths in February.

Thanks to @LillyPad for showing how to run a clinical trial to prove a treatment actually cuts death and serious illness.

Of course, if you fear your treatment doesn't work all that well for folks who really need it, you'll want to avoid this strategy.

I worry that the number of deaths (0, 1 & 2 vaccines) averages 46/day for first 6 weeks. Real Israeli deaths then are 171/day, 3.7X more.

Michael - I don't know why you think Israel had 171 Covid deaths a day - the chart is correct. The country has had about 6,000 Covid deaths since the epidemic started - at 171 a day, it would have had more than 10,000 in January and February alone.

As these nursing home outbreaks happened alongside first dose vaccinations in December and January - and they happened across Europe and the United States - vaccine apostles claimed they couldn't be related to vaccines, they were pure coincidence.

1/ Arrogance does not begin to describe these woke watchdogs who have taken it on themselves to police speech.

They don't believe in debate or the First Amendment, they believe they should control everything you see or hear.

INFORMATION YOU DON'T LIKE IS NOT MISINFORMATION...

Fox's primetime shows booking Alex Berenson twice this week to talk down the effectiveness of coronavirus vaccines, just a galactically irresponsible decision.

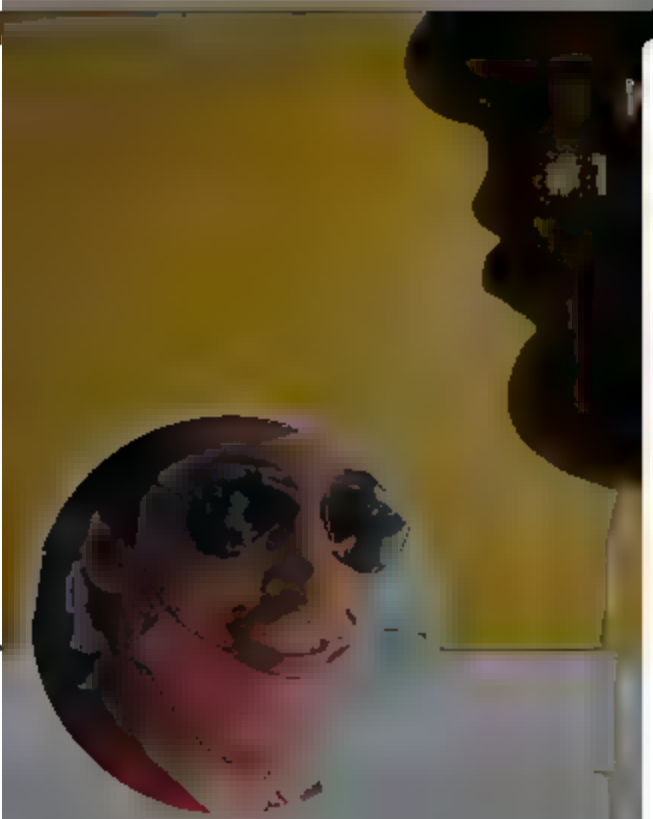
2/ By the way, I would happily debate @mattgertz about vaccines, lockdowns, and everything #Covid live. He'll never do it because he knows I know the data and studies better in my sleep than he ever will.



Trying to block contrary views is profoundly un-American.

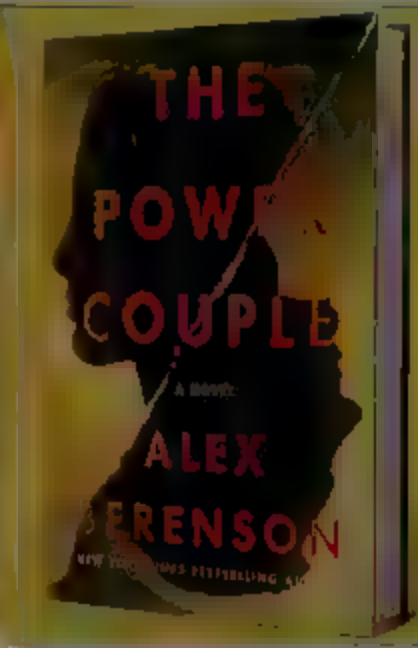
This makes my day. Hope it makes yours too!

Hi Alex, I know you were asking for pictures of normal life on twitter. I do not have a account but I know you would enjoy this. I am sitting at a park right now in NJ on this beautiful, warm sunny day. The parked if fillwd with kids including mine who are all running around and playing WITH NO MASKS!! It is a beautiful thing. Parents are here as well and the general consensus is everyone is over this.



Thank you again for all your information on your feed and I hope this message brings a sense of joy to your day.

My Best,
Rob

Two special Congressional elections: Republicans won in Wisconsin by 15% and are - shockingly - up 12% in California in what was supposed to be a toss-up.

But Democrats are the party of lockdowns, and voters love lockdowns, amirite?

The more I think about last night's speech the more late Soviet it seems: a weary old man offering orders disguised as promises to his subjects, who are either so pathetically frightened they'll do what he says or too cynical to care.

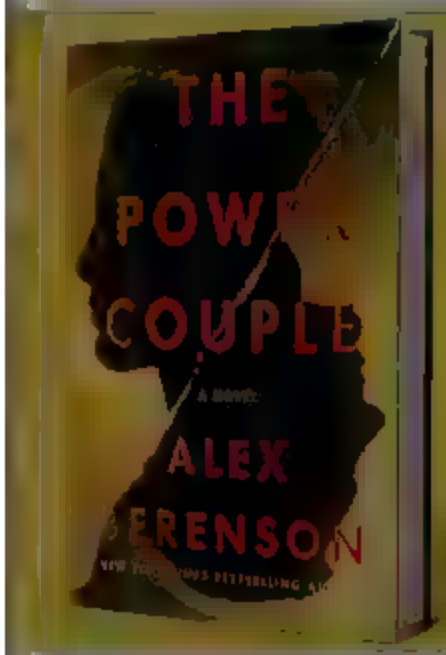
From a drug industry analyst (with a PhD in a relevant field) who has looked at the published real-world vaccine papers: except for the Danish paper, "all this real world vaccine data is garbage." Why? He explains:



> data is garbage. They're essentially comparing unvaxxed people in the peak of the winter surge (UK, Scotland Israel), to vaxxed people after the virus has gone. If they don't get the answer they want, it's adjusted with hazard ratios (age, sociodemographic, illness etc) to match what the dodgy clinical trials found, and voilà the headlines concur with the clinical trials, which did not include the old and very ill.
> Thought you'd be interested in these thoughts on the Public Health England study. 48% increase in infections after first Pfizer first dose, and 44% Increase with AZ. Second Pfizer dose is 30% increase. Increasing susceptibility and reactivating dormant virus are the likely biological mechanisms in my view. Obviously not good if you're vaccinating an entire care home at the same time.

1/ Many of you are emailing asking about Geert Vanden Bossche's claim that vaccines could drive the rise of a [redacted] superstrain.

1) The issues he raises are deeply technical and I do not feel qualified to comment.

2) As a rule, I am VERY wary of apocalyptic predictions...

3) I try to stick to concerns that data support. For example: I think concerns about miscarriage risk makes sense, but the theory the vaccines cause infertility is purely speculative.

4) Pure speculation plays into the hands of people who want to dismiss more grounded issues...

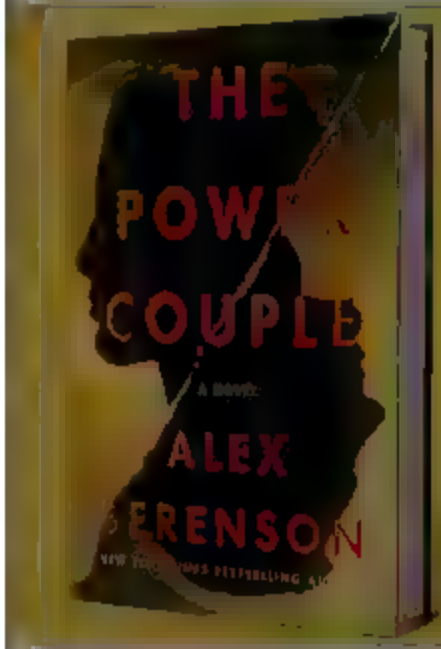
5) Thus I don't find it helpful. To me the most important issues about the vaccines (especially the mRNAs) are:



Serious side effect profile
Real-world evidence infections rise after dose 1
Lack of proven long-term efficacy
Increasing pressure to mandate them

That's plenty.

Fun fact: the #covid mRNA vaccines now account for more side effect reports to VAERS since December than EVERY OTHER VACCINE COMBINED in the last year.

I'm very concerned that we won't reach herd immunity in the US because of vaccine complacency—not anti-vax people but those who need to be incentivized & see what's in it for them. We need to clearly message vaccination = ticket to pre-pandemic life.

I'm not sure Team Apocalypse understands what's happening at this point. Team Reality - anti-lockdown, anti-mask, pro-normality, pro-schools - is tired of being lectured. And Team Reality is growing. Pretty soon this is going to be the most divisive national issue since Vietnam.

restrictions. Republican Gov. Ron DeSantis has prohibited municipalities from fining people who refuse to wear masks. And Disney World has been open since July.

Despite their differing approaches, California and Florida have experienced almost identical outcomes in COVID-19 case rates.

How have two states that took such divergent tacks arrived at similar points?

But we have to ask: Were some public health measures actually more powerful, and which ones had negligible effect or backfired by driving behavior underground?" said Aneesh Adalja, a senior scholar at the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security.

Though research has found that mask mandates and limits on group activities such as indoor dining can help slow the spread of the coronavirus, states with greater government-imposed restrictions have not always fared better than those without them.

Really, though, the side effect profile of the @astrazeneca vaccine is hardly worse than the mRNA shots, but somehow it has faced much more scrutiny. Follow the politics, I mean science.

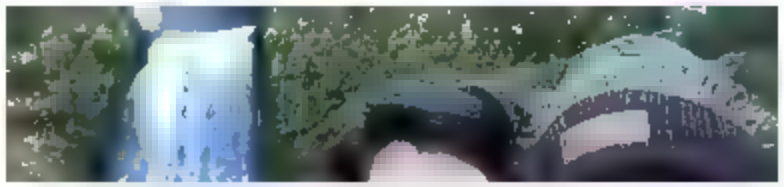
Maybe the most exploitative #covid panic porn ever. @npr tells the sad story of a 29-year-old woman who died of heart failure last March as part of the "coronavirus crisis."



Just one tiny problem: as the story explains (at the end), there's no evidence she ever had #Covid.

Yeah: I am hard-pressed to see how the @pfizer @moderna_tx vaccines have a better side effect profile than @AstraZeneca from the clinical trials or adverse events reports (and in the real-world UK data AZN actually looks MORE effective). Unsure how regulators are distinguishing.

BTW: the European @AstraZeneca suspension is an even bigger deal than it seems - Germany et al are already short on @pfizer @moderna_tx doses, so they are tacitly acknowledging that they aren't worried about leaving much of their populations unvaccinated for several months.

One of the main concerns when looking at the 14+ days group is that they didn't have enough time to develop severe disease. I censored the data for those with 15,16,17 etc. and calculated VE. It doesn't change much. For 20 days+ after 2nd dose its still around 95%.

Dvir - am I misreading this? It seems to show a sharp drop in efficacy as we hit 30+ days after the second dose. Or is that just a very small number of cases?

Even if we assume 15 days lag, it still has only a small effect. For positive cases I use 2 days lag (which is probably already too much) and 4 days for any hospitalization. All have marginal effect on efficacy.

I see - so you're saying that even counting cases at day 24 - a 10 day lag - efficacy looks mostly unchanged. Interesting.

A separate question: Are you surprised at the huge increase from the first dose (no efficacy) to the second, especially in the older population?

What I mean is: is it possible there's a really severe pool problem happening and that people who can't get the second dose, for whatever reason, are at much higher risk of being severe cases? Is there any way to adjust for that?

Let me hit 2 different parts of that. I think one was just, I'll call it, kind of the enduring – kind of the durability of the franchise, which is what I kind of heard in the first part of the question. And then second, I thought I heard in the second part of your question. So let me hit on both of those, see if I cover each of those.

So in terms of, I'll call it, the business going forward, although we're not certain, based on everything we've seen to date, we believe it's becoming increasingly likely that an annual revaccination is going to take place. And we believe that, that's going to take place for the foreseeable future, most likely a single dose, but that's what we see based on what we've seen to date. And that as – so we don't see this as a one-time event, but we see this as something that's going to continue for the foreseeable future.

Now in terms of pricing, let me see if I can hit on that. So if you look at how current demand and current pricing is being driven, it's clearly not being driven by what I'll call normal market conditions, normal market forces. It's really been driven by kind of the pandemic state that we've been in and the needs of governments to really secure doses from the various vaccine suppliers. So what we believe, what I believe is as we move from a pandemic state, from a pandemic situation to an endemic situation, normal market forces, normal market conditions will start to kick in. And factors like efficacy, booster ability, clinical utility will basically become very important, and we view that as, quite frankly, a significant opportunity for our vaccine from a demand perspective, from a pricing perspective, given the clinical profile of our vaccine. So clearly, more to come here. But we think as this shifts from pandemic to endemic, we think there's an opportunity here for us.

TL: DR - in a cohort of almost 8,000 people over 80, ER visits and hospitalizations jumped notably following the beginning of mRNA vaccinations on Feb. 1.

Strokes were an important driver of the rise.

The EMA has now received over 100,000 side effect reports for the vaccine.

These include blood clots in combination with low levels of platelets that have been observed in a few younger individuals following vaccination

Which is it?

1/ More from the @EMA_News emails. A physician highlighted this line to me: “Unclear if GCP inspections ever done.”

I hadn’t recognized the importance of that. GCP is the standard for clinical trials drug companies must follow to ensure their results “are credible and accurate.”

From a UK reader. Clearly applicable to the US too - it isn't just that VAERS is complicated or that many people are unaware of it, relentless media pressure is driving incredible cognitive dissonance about the vaccines (as it did the other way with #Covid risks).

Fact check: yep.

And it's not just classist, it turns the data upside down. The number of "fully vaccinated" people who've been infected in Israel alone dwarfs the number known reinfected after recovery worldwide - which strongly suggests natural immunity beats the vaccine kind.

> After having protecting themselves while the working class were exposed to the virus, the vaccinated #Zoomers now want #VaccinePassports, where immunity from prior infection does not count, despite stronger evidence for protection. One more assault on working people.

3) We now have strong real-world evidence from the UK and Denmark that the first dose leads to a temporary increased infection risk; thus vaccinating vulnerable populations may well lead to a short-term spike in deaths (especially if the vaccinations happen during a wave)...

Had @pfizer @moderna_tx etc run proper clinical trials - that is, enrolled enough older people at high risk of death and followed them for, say, six months - we would have a much better idea of how the vaccines affect both #Covid and all-cause mortality.

Real question. If we didn't have these vaccines, most blue states would still have all businesses locked down, and most schools would be full remote until September at the earliest. From a moral perspective does it really matter that they don't work at 95%?

Marc Damon @MarcDamon9 · 7m

In other words do the vaccines (while maybe not having 95% effectiveness, and causing some blood clots in some cases) serve the purpose of allowing governments to back out of Covid while saving face for their terrible decisions. Just a thought.

1/ Let's talk about Israel.

The good news: three months after it started mass vaccinations, new cases are finally below their levels when the campaign began.

And serious cases and deaths are far below their January peaks.

2/ This analysis ignores two big issues. First, new and overall serious cases are STILL above where they were when vaccinations started Dec. 19. Deaths are roughly the same.

Vaccine advocates note correctly that most of those cases are in people who are not “fully vaccinated.”

But of course that's not how this will be spun. Israeli newspapers are already insisting that "the vaccines saved Israel."

3/ Are we starting to see real-world evidence NOW of fewer deaths and serious cases in countries that vaccinated early? I'd say yes, but with big caveats; the trend seems to run the OTHER way in the days after the first dose, and we don't know how long the good trend will last...

4/ In other words, we can't be sure yet how many serious cases and deaths (if any) the vaccines may prevent over a year, much less several years.

Meanwhile: do we know the vaccines cause serious short-term side effects in many people? YES. The trial data are unequivocal...

5/ Do we know some people have died after and as a result of receiving the vaccines? I would say YES to that, though the vaccine church may not agree.

Do we know how many? No.
Do we know who is at risk? Not really, no.

7/ Do these vaccines carry remote long term risks such as antibody dependent enhancement or making Sars-Cov-2 mutate in a way that makes it very lethal to unvaccinated people (more on this later)? Yes.

Are those risks low? Yes.
Can we define how low? I haven't seen anyone do so.

To me, we're at a place where the vaccines should NOT be mandated or quasi-mandated, which is different than discouraging people from taking them. The cost-benefit analysis is different for everyone, and different by age...

The pressure to be vaccinated will only increase (at least in the US).

The only reason it has seemed that way is that the media is so overwhelmingly pro-vaccine and unwilling to look at any of this that I have even fewer people speaking out with me than on the other stuff. So I get thrown in with folks who are much more dogmatic than I am.

Yay Cigna! Yay vaccines!

Six statements here. Two provably untrue, two judgment calls, one true, and one depends on the physician. Can you tell which is which?

This is what I am told to say to my patients about the COVID vaccine.

Biostats question here:

A trial has 40,000 subjects: 20,000 in each arm. It sees 0 cases of condition X in both arms.

With 99% certainty, what is the minimum rate at which the treatment may cause condition X? What about 95%?

What if the trial has 13,500 subjects in each arm?

Well, approximating the number of people that will develop this condition by a Poisson, and calculating the minimum expected value of the Poisson for each the value=0 has a probability of 5% or 1%, the answers are: For 20,000, 95%: 1 over 6900; 20,000, 99%: 1 over 4300

If the treatment had no effect, you'd expect 50% of people developing the condition from the treatment. By a sample size=3, at best you can say with 95% confidence that between 37% o 100% of the cases come from treatment, so 50% still included. We can't calculate the odds...

Sorry, what do you mean by minimum? 1 over 4300 is actually the maximum rate (with 99% confidence). You can't say anything about the minimum, could be 1 over 10 trillion, 1 over 500 gazillion. The chance could be literally 0.

The inverse, actually. If the true rate was 1 in 4,300, there would only be a 1% change of getting 0 results in the sample of size of 20,000. We can't find the probability you're asking for, not in mainstream statistics.

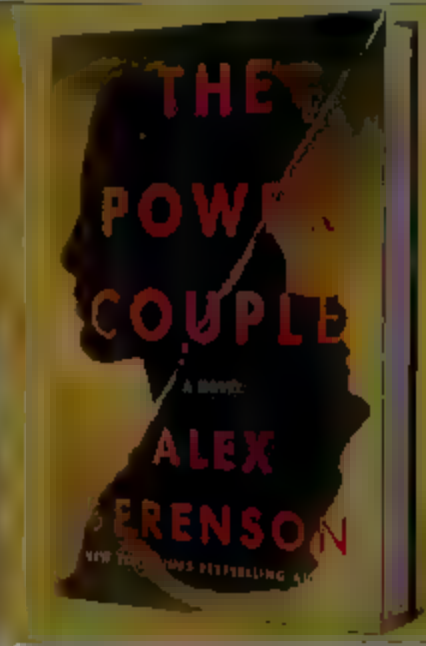
I think I see the difference: We can't say what the true rate is, only set a boundary for it.



So am I safe phrasing it the other way: with no cases in a 20K person trial arm, we can say with 99% certainty the true rate is no higher than 1 in 4,300?

No, I don't. There is good data now from Denmark and England showing a short-term rise in infection risk post dose 1. (And there's the eye test for Israel and Chile.) I think the better question is why, and whether how the initial increase compares to the later decline.

Perspective from a hospital exec who has emailed before and whose chain includes several Sunbelt facilities. He is highly confident overall (though note that his hospitals are seeing shorter lengths of stay, which cuts a little against the longer censuses).

Things that are different than earlier this year:
1. Treatment has changed. Less quick to intubate and quicker to administer drugs that are having positive effects. Result, lower death rate and lower length of stay on admitted patients.
2. As some other volume comes back, we definitely have a subset of patients that come in for non-Covid reasons, yet test positive for Covid. Obviously this "counts" as a Covid admit. Result, more healthy people with Covid and lower death rate/length of stay. As a side note I will say, it's a little disingenuous for people to say this is hospitals' attempt to game the system and get higher reimbursement — we always document all diagnoses, that's just the proper way to document.
3. Most markets are doing a much better job of Anecdotal, but points to the same. the Northwestern study on the mutation of the virus may be impacting and lowering the acuity (remember, viruses generally mutate to less deadly versions, that's Darwinism at work).

We are still running at about 80% capacity for admits, ED volume, and ICU volume at every facility, including

Back to the original purpose of lockdowns, which was to flatten the curve enough so hospitals aren't overwhelmed. We are even less likely to be

1/ The data are clearer and clearer: the early phase of mass #Covid vaccination campaigns leads to a surge in cases and deaths.

The two European countries that have vaccinated most aggressively since early February are Hungary and Serbia. Guess what's happened?

2/ Here are trends in Germany for comparison.

At this point I can't think of a country where this has NOT occurred, large or small: the UAE, UK, Israel, Chile, Gibraltar, Hungary, and probably the US (though it wasn't as obvious because states moved at different speeds).

3/ You could hardly pick a more diverse group of countries - geographically, culturally, even religiously. And seasonality can't be the issue - the trend is happening NOW in Hungary and Chile, which are different hemispheres.

Don't worry, the media will continue to ignore this.

The UK approved the @pfizer vaccine on Dec. 2, before anywhere else in the world, and aggressively started vaccinating seniors in late December. Right on schedule cases and deaths went up. The new variant got blamed somehow.

So @nytimes says @EMA_News said the AstraZeneca vaccine is “safe.”

If you can find that word in this statement, more power to you. They said they believe the benefits outweigh the risks. That’s not the same as “safe.”

How it's going: TBD effectiveness for a TBD period of time - at the cost of a near-term spike in Covid cases, tons of serious short-term side effects, and a TBD number of vaccine-caused deaths and injuries.

Yay vaccines?

Meanwhile, about that updated 3-foot guidance for schools from @cdcgov, a school administrator has some bad news:

People keep talking about the CDC's decision to change the guidance to three feet instead of six.

Listen, I run a school system. I cannot be mentioned as part of this, but it's complete BS. Read the updated guidance. It says schools can now use only three feet of distance, but it does NOT change the rules regarding close contact and quarantining.

So sure, you can use three feet. But if anyone with a positive case ever comes through your doors, you are screwed, because you will have to send the entire school home, or huge chunks of it. It's a problem at 6 feet, to be sure. But anybody opting for three feet is simply opening themselves up for a gargantuan day quarantines.

Seriously. Look.

https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/community/schools-childcare/operation-strategy.html

- The definition of a close contact is someone who was within 6 feet of a person diagnosed with COVID-19 for a total of 15 minutes or more over a 24 hour period. The definition of a close contact applies regardless of whether either person was wearing a mask.
- For schools that use less than 6 feet between students in classrooms, the definition of close contacts should not

I will not. I am sticking to the published clinical trial data, the VAERS reports, etc. No infertility or prion concerns, much less the more far-out stuff. There's plenty to talk about in any case. This will be the longest UT and is the first I felt could be a book by itself.

Cases are starting to rise in the US as vaccinations accelerate. Total coincidence, just like in Israel, the UK, the UAE, Serbia, Chile, and Hungary!

Good news is we got through the old-people-dying-after-the-first-dose thing in January, so this should be mostly positive tests.

Look, CJD kills people fast - but it normally isn't even DIAGNOSED in 36 days, and most people live at least six months after symptoms appear.

I understand there are privacy issues here, and people are grieving, but the company is going to need to offer some clarity on this.

(CJD)

Symptoms

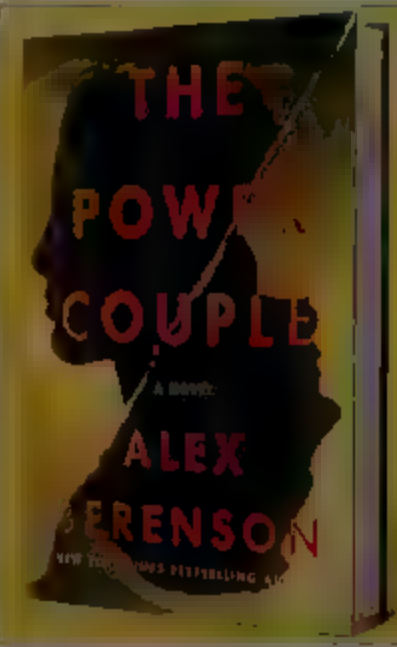
The most common early symptoms of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease—memory loss and confusion—may resemble those of other dementias, such as Alzheimer disease. These symptoms are the first to occur in most people with CJD but eventually develop in all affected people. For others, the first symptom is loss of muscle coordination (ataxia). In people with vCJD, the first symptoms tend to be psychiatric symptoms (such as anxiety or depression), rather than memory loss. Later symptoms are similar in both forms.

(CJD)

The muscles that control breathing and coughing are usually impaired, increasing the risk of pneumonia.

Vision may become blurry or dim.



The symptoms worsen, usually much more rapidly than in Alzheimer disease, resulting in severe dementia.

Most people with CJD die within 6 to 12 months after symptoms appear. About 10 to 20% of people survive for 2 years or more. People with vCJD usually survive for about 18 months. Often, the cause of death is pneumonia.

Remember Bonaire? The Isle of Man, in the Irish Sea, is an even more striking case - it has had an explosion in #Covid cases (and a death last week, the first since November) following the acceleration of its vaccination campaign.

Bonaire is a small Caribbean island that has largely isolated itself since the coronavirus epidemic started. Aside from a few cases in mid-January, it has been largely Covid-free.

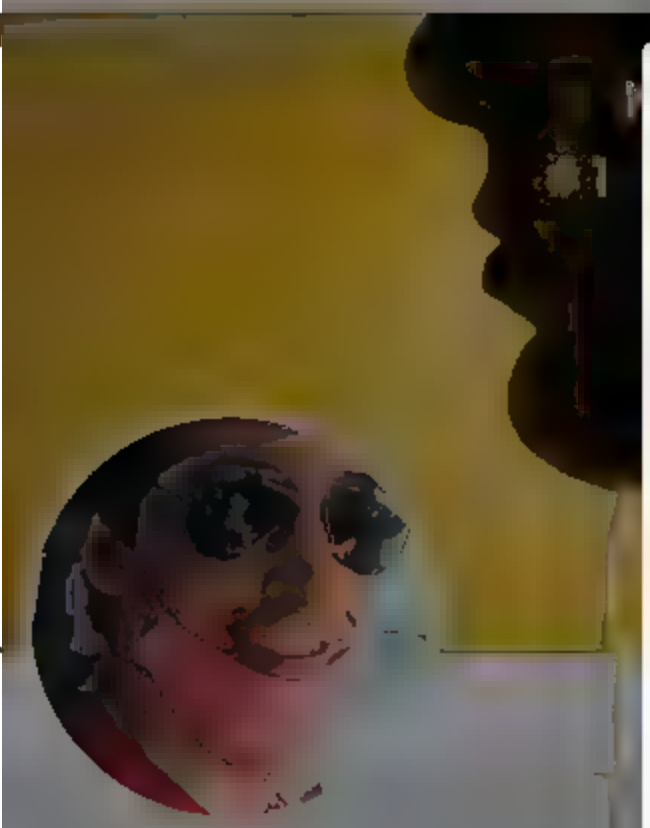
It began vaccinations with the Pfizer shot on Feb. 17.



You'll NEVER BELIEVE what happened next!

Here, I fixed it for you, @justinbaragona:

I was wrong. Schools should have stayed open. I see now we've done terrible damage to kids and young adults over a disease that largely doesn't touch them.

I believe in you! You can admit reality! It's hard, but yooou cannnn dooo it!

This from @AstraZeneca might well be the worst #Covid vaccine press release yet. Not a word on overall side effects (which were surely lousy based on the public European data), no specific figures on thrombotic or platelet events. Nothing on deaths or all-cause deaths either...

Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

More evidence for the crazy conspiracy theory that the first vaccine dose causes spikes in #Covid infections. It comes from - @pfizer itself.

You may recall Pfizer excluded thousands of "suspected" Covid cases in its clinical trial. That was odd enough.

But a reader noticed...

> "Among 3,410 total cases of suspected but unconfirmed COVID-19 in the overall study population, 1,594 occurred in the vaccine group vs. 1816 in the placebo group. Suspected COVID-19 cases that occurred within 7 days after any vaccination were 409 in the vaccine group vs. 287 in the placebo group. It is possible that the imbalance in suspected COVID-19 cases occurring in the 7 days post vaccination represents vaccine reactogenicity with symptoms that overlap with those of COVID-19. Overall though, these data do not raise a concern that protocol-specified reporting of suspected, but unconfirmed COVID-19 cases could have masked clinically significant adverse events that would not have otherwise been detected."

Oh no, it was even better than that. They blew up the study by offering the vaccine to participants who received the placebo. Now we will NEVER have clean long-term safety or effectiveness data.

But that's cool because it's not like people are being forced to get vaccinated.

This is from the @us_fda briefing book for Come-here-naughty, by the way.

confirmed were not recorded as adverse events unless they met regulatory criteria for seriousness. Two serious cases of suspected but unconfirmed COVID-19 were reported, both in the vaccine group, and narratives were reviewed. In one case, a 36-year-old male with no medical comorbidities experienced fever, malaise, nausea, headache and myalgias beginning on the day of Dose 2 and was hospitalized 3 days later for further evaluation of apparent infiltrates on chest radiograph and treatment of dehydration. A nasopharyngeal PCR test for SARS-CoV-2 was negative on the day of admission, and a chest CT was reported as normal. The participant was discharged from the hospital 2 days after admission. With chest imaging findings that are difficult to reconcile, it is possible that this event represented reactogenicity following the second vaccination, a COVID-19 case with false negative test that occurred less than 7 days after completion of the vaccination series, or an unrelated infectious process. In the other case, a 66-year-old male with no medical comorbidities experienced fever, myalgias, and shortness of breath beginning 28 days post-Dose 2 and was hospitalized one day later with abnormal chest CT showing a small left-sided consolidation. He was discharged from the hospital 2 days later, and multiple nasopharyngeal PCR tests collected over a 10-day period beginning 2 days after symptom onset were negative. It is possible, though highly unlikely, that this event represents a COVID-19 case with multiple false negative tests that occurred more than 7 days after completion of the vaccination regimen, and more likely that it represents an unrelated infectious process.

Among 3410 total cases of suspected but unconfirmed COVID-19 in the overall study population, 1594 occurred in the vaccine group vs. 1816 in the placebo group. Suspected COVID-19 cases that occurred within 7 days after any vaccination were 409 in the vaccine group vs. 257 in the placebo group. It is possible that the imbalance in suspected COVID-19 cases occurring in the 7 days postvaccination represents vaccine reactogenicity with symptoms that overlap with those of COVID-19. Overall though, these data do not raise a concern that protocol-specified reporting of suspected, but unconfirmed COVID-19 cases could have masked clinically significant adverse events that would not have otherwise been detected.

Subgroup Analyses

There were no specific safety concerns identified in subgroup analyses by age, race, ethnicity, medical comorbidities, or prior SARS-CoV-2 infection, and occurrence of solicited, unsolicited, and serious adverse events in these subgroups were generally consistent with the overall study population.

Pregnancies

Female study participants of childbearing potential were screened for pregnancy prior to each vaccination, with a positive test resulting in exclusion or discontinuation from study vaccination. The study is collecting outcomes for all reported pregnancies that occur after vaccination, or before vaccination and not detected by pre-vaccination screening tests. Twenty-three pregnancies were reported through the data cut-off date of November 14, 2020 (12 vaccine, 11

Right now, it is very hard to distinguish the course of the epidemic this winter in countries that have vaccinated heavily, such as Israel and the UK, and those that have not, such as Canada and Germany - cases fell rapidly in February almost everywhere. The vaccinating countries had higher spikes in January and now have fallen somewhat below the non-vaccinating countries. A nurse writes about her 105-degree fever during the @pfizer trial. "It scared me."

Remember: these volunteers were both in generally good health and motivated. They WANTED the vaccine to work. The public is not likely to be so forgiving - or handle the side effects as well.

COVID-19 Resource Center

When I woke up again at 5:30 AM, I felt hot. Burning. I took my temperature and looked at the reading: 104.9 °F (40.5 °C). This was the highest fever I can ever remember having, and it scared me. I took acetaminophen and drank a glass of water. When the research office opened at 9 AM, I called to report my reaction to the injection. Thankfully, my fever had come down to 102.0 °F (38.9 °C) by then. The research nurse said, "A lot of people have reactions after the second injection. Keep monitoring your symptoms and call us if anything changes." My fever hovered around 99.5 °F (37.5 °C) for the rest of the day. By the next morning, all my symptoms were gone except a sore, swollen bump at the injection site.

There were no deaths, of course. But one wouldn't expect any - as big as the trials were, they were too small to pick up such rare events. By the same token, I believe there's been only one reported [illegible] death in the ~30,000+ placebo patients in the Pfizer and Moderna trials...

So instead the question is: is it possible to make any estimates from the number of Grade 3 and 4 adverse events? Do other vaccine trials provide any clues? Does preclinical or animal data? This is truly a seeker's question - I'm hoping an expert might have an answer.

Hi. Please keep me anonymous. To protect my kid.

We live in Palm Beach County, Florida, a majority Democrat county. A large percentage of the parents and teachers are terrified of the ro.

Schools open for in-person classes, sort of, next week.

District administration seems to be deliberately setting this up to fail. Messaging is wildly inconsistent. Will there be testing? Will kids get

Primary

For example, teachers are not allowed to teach the kids in-person. That wouldn't be fair to the kids who are learning from home. There will be "overflow rooms" in case there are too many kids in a room, so the extra kids will be in another room learning via computer.

Socioeconomic status is definitely an issue. Rich families are more likely to keep kids home. Poor families with 2 working parents have little choice.

We are lucky. Our kid's teachers (high school) are motivated to do the best they can with this

WASHINGTON — President Trump backed away from further military confrontation with Iran on Wednesday after a barrage of missiles fired at American troops killed no one and Tehran indicated that would be the end of its retaliation for the killing of a top general.

"Iran appears to be standing down which is a good thing for all parties concerned and a very good thing for the world," Mr. Trump said

"The United States is ready to embrace peace with all who seek it," he said.

His comments came the morning after Iran fired a reported 22 ballistic missiles at two military bases in Iraq that house United States troops in response to last week's American drone strike that killed Maj. Gen. Qassim Suleimani, commander of Iran's elite security and intelligence forces. No American troops were injured or killed in the attacks, the president said.

In the hours since, some analysts expressed cautious optimism that the missile strikes might prove the end of the immediate conflict rather than the start of a larger confrontation that could spiral into a full-fledged war. Iran's Sorry, free-'em-allers, the quote speaks for itself. Three days in to "bail reform," and the woman behind it is already walking away.

"I think we need to take a look," Stewart-Cousins said. "We want to take a look at reforming the system but making sure we do it right."

> Chris Geidner @chrisgeidner
> This is a ridiculously misleading tweet. Stewart-Cousins repeatedly pushes back against the interviewer. Stewart-Cousins repeatedly said (1) its day three of the new law, and (2) lawmakers, as always, will look at how the law is working and make changes if necessary. That's all. …

But hey, [redacted] etc, you just keep telling yourselves that people in New York don't want judges to from consider public safety when they consider bail for people charged with crimes like assault, DV, etc...

The better question, I guess, is not why you're surprised voters want judges to consider public safety when setting bail, but why you don't.

Hey @juliebosman - who cares? The line is purely a function of novelty. (Krispy Kreme stores used to have them too when they opened in new cities.) Too bad the psychiatric and public health impacts of cannabis happen later, after the lines are gone and reporters have moved on...

Truly I don't understand the journo-child attitude, right down to the language: "stakeholders." As if public health authorities and companies that sell an addictive product are equally trustworthy - just a couple of competing interests!

Of course not. Obviously. If something is physically impossible, it's physically impossible no matter how much data I have. Either I've messed up my analysis (likely) or this is a fish-in-the-MRI finding, a chance finding, an aberration in data...

Psychosis causes violence, and that violence is starting to tear at the seams of the mental health care system. Physicians, nurses, and techs who deal with psychotic patients quietly put their lives for the rest of us every day.

And denying that reality for whatever reason - well-meaning or profit-driven - makes matters worse. And, oh yeah, the opposite of addiction isn't connection. (Lots of lonely people don't use drugs; lots of social ones do.) The opposite of addiction? Oddly enough, it's abstinence.

Kudos to @nytimes for this: "What started as a weekend dalliance morphed swiftly into all-consuming dependence." Because, see, it's not childhood trauma or loneliness or the fact the drug is illegal. Those may be accelerants. But the drug, its raw chemical power, is the fuel...

1/ Let's talk about this @NYTStyles piece on "cannabis churches" - which make cannabis doctors look like models of sincerity. The piece isn't entirely credulous, but it displays what I would call the bare minimum of skepticism...

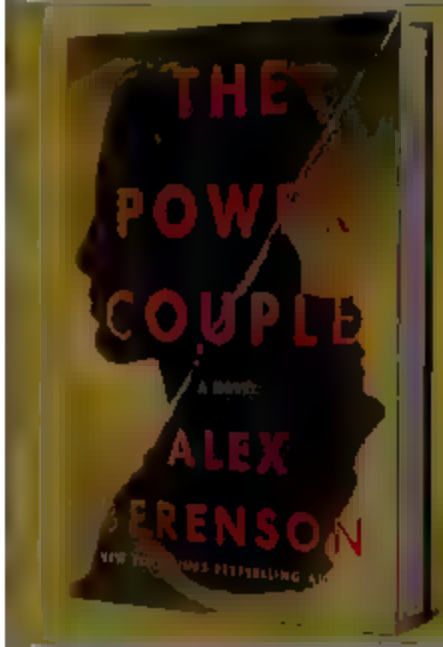
Hey, @benoonomics, maybe we should ask the economist whose pathbreaking work showed that recreational legalization accounted for about 1/2 of the spike in cannabis-related driving deaths in Colorado and Washington after 2014? Oh, wait, that was you.



in 2015 and 2016. In Panel (b) the synthetic counterpart struggles to match the overall levels and trends of Washington during the pre-treatment period. While the trend of the synthetic control is similar to Washington's overall trend upward and then back down before legalization, Washington's data are volatile and the overall fit is relatively poor compared to Colorado's. For this reason, despite a somewhat sizable percentage increase in high traffic fatalities per VMT, the placebo-based p-value seen in Table 6 is still 0.304, and indeed as shown in Panel (d), many placebo units had more volatility in the post period than Washington. Furthermore, most of Washington's estimated average increase in the fraction of fatalities that are marijuana-related is driven by a large increase in 2014. Notably, in this year marijuana sales were only 3,991 pounds in Washington, while they increased to 66,390 pounds in 2015 and 179,301 pounds in 2016. So while recreational sales were increasing over these years, the synthetic unit caught up with and more closely tracked Washington's marijuana-related traffic fatalities during the same period.

Our synthetic control estimates suggest that marijuana-related fatalities increased in states without recreational legalization. So while marijuana-related fatalities per billion VMT went up by more than 60 percent in the years after legalization, our point estimates suggest that only 45 to 60 percent of this increase is caused by the legalization of marijuana though the effect is not statistically distinguishable from zero. While these synthetic control analyses do not provide compelling evidence that marijuana-related fatalities rose, it could

This is a crucial question (though I'd disagree that permanent psychosis is "exclusively" driven by adolescent use; it seems clear that the new high-THC products can break people who begin using heavily in their 20s, and there is anecdotal evidence of risk even past that.)...

A very good question and the answer is I don't know of any - there is clear evidence that adults with a diagnosis of cannabis-induced psychosis are quite likely to progress to schizophrenia over time, but even those studies don't show the age of initiation (as far as I know).

Alex Berenson
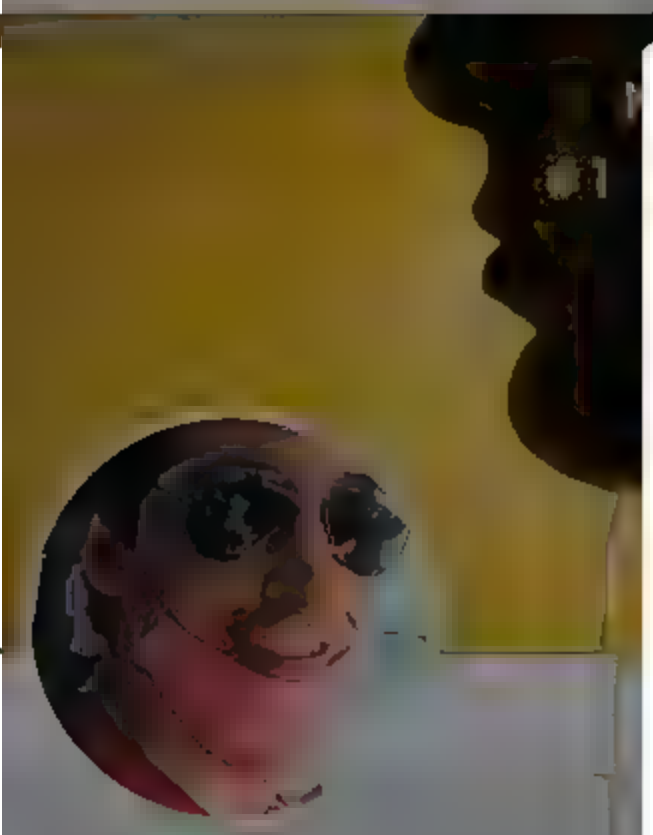
@AlexBerenson

Follow



But I would also note there's a good study (cited in the book) that new psychosis diagnoses post-30 (but pre-dementia) are more frequent than people think. It may be that people are subclinical for a while and then progress - from drugs, stress, or just the disease.

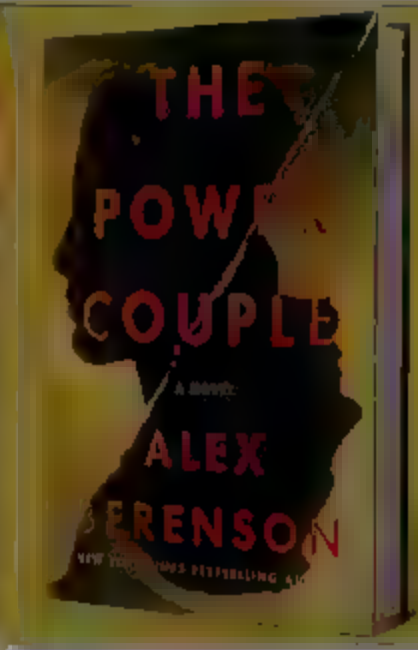
Just one poll in one state, but it's the first I've found since the vaping crisis began and the @Surgeon_General spoke out. And guess what - support for legalization is falling.



National support >65% means legalization is inevitable. <55%, not so much...

Medicate ourselves? We can't do anything ourselves in a free country? Not everyone can even go to the doctor?

So true! Here's what @isaac_campos wrote in "Home Grown" - his definitive history of Mexican attitudes towards cannabis - about the 1920 Mexican decision to ban marijuana far before the US did. That's what you said, right? And by "what you said" I mean exactly the opposite.

marijuana's inclusion was clearly Mexico's own contribution, for that drug would not become a target of international anti-drug efforts until 1925.[78]

ECA study in the US reported around 4% violence attributable to people with psychotic disorders. We found it to be around 5% in Sweden (and violent crime being the outcome). Other studies incl the Dunedin cohort report a range of 2-10%. All probably upper estimates.

Dr. Fazel, am I wrong that the 5% figure substantially understates the risk you found for more severe violence such as homicide? People with psychosis committed about 3% of common assaults but almost 20% of homicides, if I read your paper correctly.

While the outcome is the same—one is based on an absence of proactive behaviors, whereas the other is based in violent tendencies.

It seems to me that people are conflating the two.

During the review of confirmed child fatalities, cases were reviewed for a documented history of substance abuse (including inappropriate use of prescribed medications) and for active concerns for substance abuse at the time of the child fatality.

For FY2018, 138 of the 211 child fatalities caused by abuse or neglect involved a parent or caregiver actively using a substance and/or under the influence of at least one substance that affected the ability to care for the child. In the tables and chart below, the substance abuse is described by type and if it was reported. Marijuana was the substance most identified as actively being used by the perpetrator (85 cases) in child abuse and neglect-related fatalities. In 21 child fatalities, methamphetamines and amphetamines were being actively used by the caregiver.

Hey @baclin, did you read what Dr. Gottlieb wrote? The FDA doesn't regulate THC vapes, whether they are sold in dispensaries or out, in states where cannabis is legal or not. The promise that dispensary vapes are somehow safer is not backed by federal oversight.

> The legal vapes have been actively regulated by FDA since Aug 2017. FDA has conducted thousands of inspections of manufacturers and vape stores, published manufacturing guidance, sought product removals etc. These tragedies point to illegal vapes and THC.

For most people, cannabis increases not decreases compassion.

It took 40 years for Big Tobacco to get taken down. 20 for Big Opioids. I guess that's progress. How long for Psychosis Inc? (The problem for plaintiffs is that commercialized cannabis has been such a bad business at a corporate scale the money may not be there.)

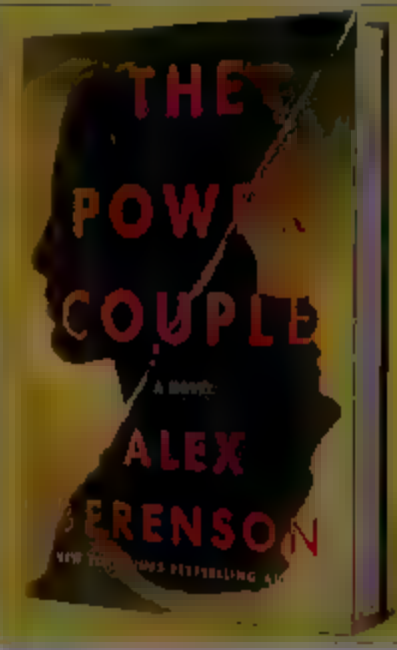
See, cannabis totally works for anxiety! Proof: After her son died with meth in his blood, this mom (allegedly) offered some to her teenage daughter to "help [her] deal."



Then mom put her little boy's corpse in a freezer to keep him fresh!

To equate coffee use with heroin use - which is EXACTLY what you're doing here- is one of 2 things. Ignorant, or intentionally misleading. Are they both technically drugs by the way you're defining? Sure. But putting the use of both on the same field is SO irresponsible.

That sounds about right to me, Alex. Alcohol prohibition is a term used to describe when criminal statutes were created and enforced against production and use of alcohol in US. Modern drug prohibitionists, I think, favor same tools used against (certain) other drugs.

Bill Maher gets candid about David Koch's death: 'I'm glad he's dead'

USA TODAY Entertainment August 24, 2019, 2:00 PM EDT

Bill Maher is not holding back his thoughts about David Koch, who died Friday at 79.

The billionaire businessman, who built a conservative political empire with his brother Charles, died "after many years of fighting various illnesses," according to Koch Industries.

During Friday's episode of "Real Time with Bill Maher," the late night host rejoiced Koch's death, saying "(Expletive) him... I'm glad he's dead."

Can someone explain to me what "prohibitionist" means?
We can't "prohibit" drugs. They exist.
We can encourage their use (because they create joy, as [redacted] says);
Remain neutral on their use;
Or discourage their use.

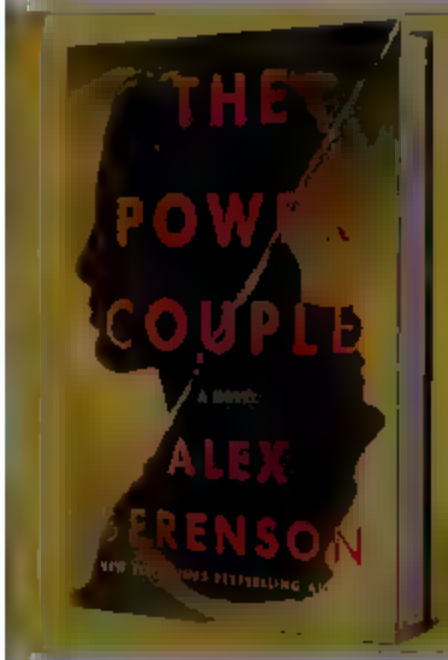
And, btw, does anyone else recognize the desperate irony in this passage about the sister of the King County prosecutor, and the lesson he took from her struggles with addiction? (Hint: it's in the first and last paragraphs.)

SUNDAY REVIEW Seattle Has Figured Out How to End the War on Drugs

The New York Times

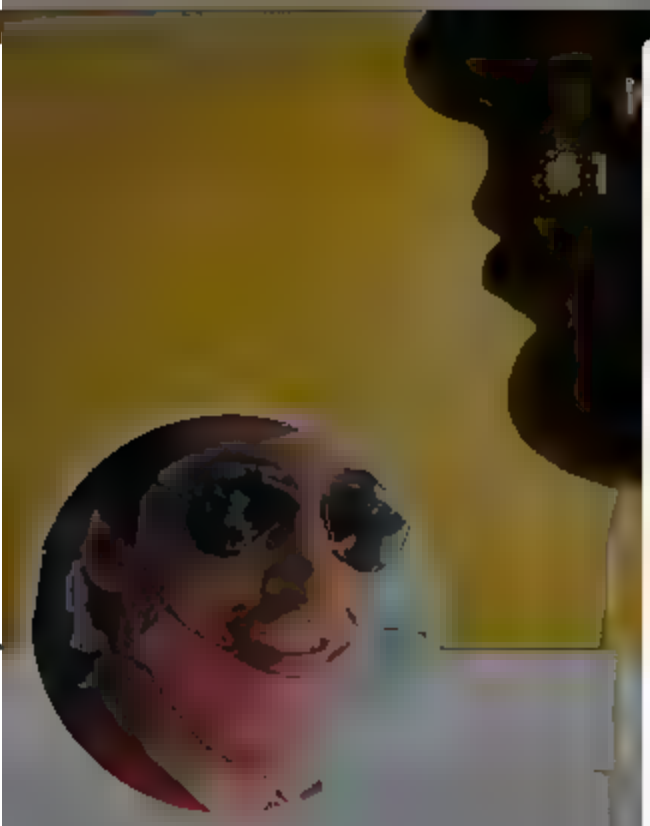
A photo of Mr. Satterberg's sister, Shelley K stemming from past drug use. Ruth Fremson,



As Dan Satterberg rose through the ranks of prosecutors, Shelley Satterberg wrestled with addiction. She was never arrested or jailed (middle-class drug users often avoid police attention, which focuses on marginalized people who use or sell in public).

Dan told me that he was angry at Shelley — angry that she had made terrible choices, angry that she had hurt their parents. But over time he also concluded that his own approach of prosecuting drug users accomplished little, except that it isolated them from the family and friends who offered the best support system to escape addiction.

In 2015, Dan took Shelley to Navos, a nonprofit that provides mental health and addiction services, and she was able to stop using street drugs and gradually put her life back in order. Dan saw that treatment made a huge difference in Shelley's life and became a believer.



Yet it wasn't enough. Shelley died of a urinary tract infection last [illegible] as a consequence of previous drug and alcohol abuse.

And the correct answer is, yes, cannabis. Only 1 in 18 alcohol users drinks every day - and despite heroin's well-deserved reputation for addictiveness, only 1 in 6 heroin users uses every day. But 1 in 5 cannabis users does. Not that cannabis is addictive...

Yep! The correct answer is "more than doubled" - psychiatric hospitalizations of young adults with serious mental illness rose from 97,000 in 2008 to 247,000 in 2018. But don't worry: The drug lobby will keep saying there's no evidence psychosis is rising alongside cannabis use.

The highest risk comes with men in their 20s, who are at the highest baseline risk anyway and are most likely to have untreated symptoms. But pretending psychosis doesn't drive an appreciable fraction of violence in the US (and everywhere)... well, wishing doesn't make it so.

This is fascinating: nine months ago, 60 percent of people in New Zealand supported legalizing cannabis - roughly the same as the US. Four months ago, 52 percent. Today, 39 percent - down 21 points in 9 months. Support for legalization is a mile wide and an inch deep...

Btw, @ian_hamilton_ is the same guy who said we shouldn't study psychosis in cannabis users any more, after @TheLancetPsych debunked his "1 in 20,000" nonsense. I suppose that's one way to handle research that produces results you don't like.

little doubt now about the association between cannabis and mental health, but the risk is small in comparison with the number of users. I think it is time to stop repeating studies on this issue as they are adding little in the way of new information. What would be novel is to work out in advance of exposure to cannabis who is at risk of developing psychosis, rather than simply count those who have already unfortunately become unwell.

So amazing! Violence in Colorado and Washington has plunged since recreational cannabis dispensaries opened! Murders and serious assaults in 2018 fell by 1/3 compared to 2013 - way better than the national change! Marijuana legalization is a huge public health success story!

Hey @JohnFPfaff - question. Is it common for jails not to allow in-person visits to people who are being held on bail, pre-trial? (Not Epstein-related - I am hearing from a family member on a cannabis psychosis case.) That seems incredibly punitive, if not unconstitutional...

Not sure it's common, but it is happening more and more:

And here's a piece whose opening anecdote involves pre-trial, to make clear it isn't just abt post-conviction cases:

John Pfaff @JohnFPfaff · 13 Aug 2019
The piece in The Appeal quotes Prison Policy Initiative (without a link) for the claim that about 600 jails use the tech right now, tho not all ban in-person visits completely.

There are about 2,800 jails jurisdictions in the US ( ), so that's ~20%.

Honestly the power of the trend surprises me. Violence around illegal MJ dealing makes up a notable fraction of all murders (see police comments in TX, MD, KS, ATL, etc). So one would expect the argument that legalization will reduce violent crime to hold up better than it has.

Lol. As I say in the book, murders understandably grab attention but agg assaults are a far better marker for violent crime - murders come off a relatively small base and on a year to year basis can fluctuate based on anything from a surgeon's abilities to a single mass shooting.

Fun fact: involuntary psychiatric hospitalizations almost doubled in Ontario, Canada's largest province, from 2008 to 2018. Overall hospitalizations also soared. Totally unconnected to the rise in cannabis use and super-potent THC extracts, no doubt.

Hey [redacted] - I realized today that the Newburgh-Beacon Bridge has a nearly unique anomaly. And I thought, who is the kind of geek who would appreciate this little glitch,.. and who knows that bridge? So. Care to guess why it's so unusual?

Turns out the southern span was built later and is wider - the bridge isn't as old as I thought but even so when it was first built in 1963 it was only one span with one lane each way, like the Bear Mountain Bridge. Which didn't work so well once I-84 was finished.

Next time you're near the Manhattan Bridge, check out how many lanes go in each direction, across both levels. It's crazy.

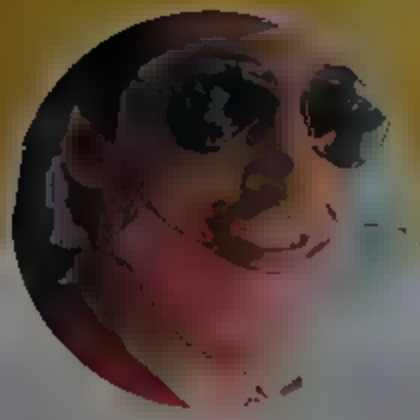
I believe I am being mocked. (Sadly for you, I now have lots of experience being mocked on Twitter... so your gentle sarcasm barely cuts. I'm more used to DIE IDIOT NARC these days.)



Come on, is it not odd that a bridge wouldn't have the same number of lanes in each direction?

I do wonder if the rising use of long-acting formulations of anti-psychotics (usually called depots, they can last up to 3 months) might be masking some of a recent real-world THC-fueled rise of psychotic disorders. But that's just speculation at this point.

Fun fact: involuntary psychiatric hospitalizations almost doubled in Ontario, Canada's largest province, from 2008 to 2018. Overall hospitalizations also soared. Totally unconnected to the rise in cannabis use and super-potent THC extracts, no doubt.

We also know that Epstein served as a sexual procurer for many rich and powerful men. Is it possible he had information not yet disclosed about them? Is it possible - for example - he kept a diary in coded language that only he understood?

There is no particular reason to believe that Jeffrey Epstein would be suicidal. His behavior demonstrates he was a malignant narcissist. He had a reasonable chance at freedom - many independent lawyers believed the govt was vulnerable to a double-jeopardy defense.

Yes and no. We don't know how serious that was, whether it was a bona fide attempt or just an effort to get out of MCC for a night or two; assuming it was a real attempt, then the question of why he wasn't on 24-hour watch becomes even more urgent.

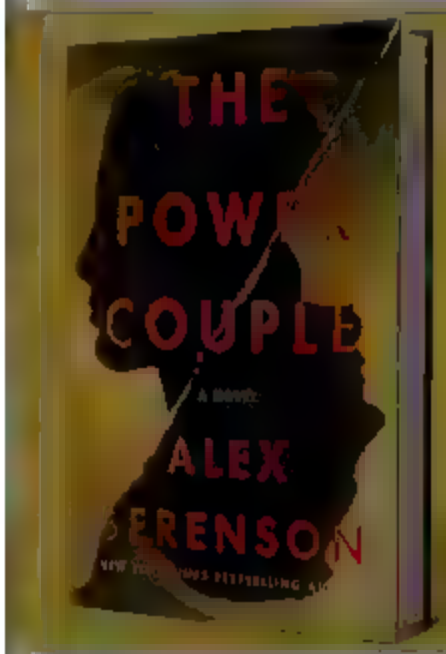
Jeffrey Epstein had a lot more money than the 46 million he bilked from Les Wexner.



And he didn't make it from financial investments.

He was obviously a front man for other people involved in these terrible activities.

Find the sources of his money.

One thing I've learned from @berenson411: Prisons (and Mid-Hudson Forensic Psychiatric, where she worked five years, is effectively a prison) are very much closed shops. Especially at night. Once the bosses go home, the guards are in charge. And they can do whatever they want.

Let's be honest: this is at the least a terrible failure by the feds. Any prisoner who tried to kill himself two weeks before ought to be on very close watch. Weirdly, my wife visited MCC on a different case a few days before Epstein's first reported attempt...

Great to see this piece in @volkskrant - one of the biggest Dutch newspapers - on the cannabis-psychosis link, with interviews with @jimvanos1 and yours truly. Why can't American papers write this straightforwardly on this issue?

Yet another well-designed study proving what psychiatrists see every day - cannabis use worsens psychosis, especially "positive" symptoms like paranoia. Yet groups like @DrugPolicyOrg still pretend that "self-medication" is a real explanation for the cannabis-psychosis link.

Abstract

OBJECTIVE: To examine the long-term (up to 10 years) patterns related to cannabis use in a sample of patients with first episode of psychosis (FEP) and the effect that consumption might have on clinical, functioning and neurocognition at long-term.

METHODS: Cannabis use was described in 209 FEP patients. Patients were divided into three groups according to cannabis use: persistent users, ex-users and never-users. Groups were longitudinally (baseline and 10-year follow-up) compared on clinical, functional and cognitive variables.

RESULTS: Clinical differences at 10-year follow-up

Cannabis as a cause (notice I didn't say THE cause) of psychosis now seems like "settled science" and should be treated as such in official statements.

That doesn't mean that cannabis CAUSED the violence, ie, had he not consumed cannabis he would not have acted in this way. In fact, this is the fundamental problem of causal inference, you can't see the same person under two different conditions.

I.e. someone has no history of violence, uses cannabis, becomes psychotic, commits a violent crime. Those super-clear cases are far from exceptional.

Your conflating two arguments [redacted]. We are talking about mass killings, not simple violence. Each point needs to be argued separately. So, any evidence provided on simple violence doesn't support mass violence, unless you have evidence same mechanism, please share

Yes, in any one case proving causation can be difficult. The same is true of cigarettes and lung cancer, btw. That doesn't mean we can't make causal statements. And btw the cannabis-psychosis-violence connection can sometimes be extremely clear.

First, these remain open questions. However, I have found evidence to support that psychosis causes violence. I'm less convinced of the cannabis -> psychosis statement. Nonetheless, the logic is false. As I just stated, even if we assume A->B and B->C, it is false to assume A->C

David Fink, PhD @DavidSFink · 6 Aug 2019

You said it correctly, even if we assume those points, for this to be true, we would need cannabis to causes mass shootings, which I have NEVER seen evidence of. It is completely possible that A->B and B->C, but A->!C, and that is your logical fallacy here.

Compare 2013, the last year before recreational dispensaries opened, and 2017, and the trend is far worse - the number of drivers in fatal crashes with any cannabinoid (either the active or inactive metabolite of THC) went from 55 to 139.

I don't know what Bertha's skeptical of; I am skeptical of the fact that a hard measure - a tox screen - was replaced by a softer measure, leading to a massive and massively convenient decline in reported deaths. That's where I'd be starting if I had the time to report this out.

But wait, there's more. @Singer4BoCo - clearly an advocate for good public policy and in no way a shill for the cannabis industry - is questioning if his state should keep testing all DUI samples for THC, out of not-at-all specious "constitutional" concerns.

Wow. So the state of Colorado has decided to test all DUI blood samples for cannabis. This is groundbreaking - in general, police depts test routinely for alcohol but not THC, because testing for THC is far more expensive...

"Mental health" is a useful umbrella term for people who want to hide the facts about psychosis and violence (or drug use/abuse and violence).

Depression and anxiety and even PTSD are extremely widespread conditions/diagnoses - trying to find causal links between them and violence is pointless and next to impossible.

I am thinking about a follow-up, which would be a broader philosophical critique of the way we now consider drug use, and what a better way to consider it might be. As for Netflix, TYC is so antithetical to the way Hollywood looks at cannabis that I'm not holding my breath.

Look, the US has a serious problem with gun violence, but this is just untrue. Latin American countries have huge numbers of mass shootings by any definition that gets the US to 249 this year, it's just no one bothers to count them...

And even Canada regularly has firearm-related multiple murders (in Europe they are rarer, but even there they do happen). The point is not that we shouldn't seriously talk about controlling firearms...

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

The point is that the media focuses on this particular aspect of gun violence as a way to avoid the broader issues around firearms (and violence) in the US. And in so doing it makes the debate almost meaningless.

Look, the US has a serious problem with gun violence, but this is just untrue. Latin American countries have huge numbers of mass shootings by any definition that gets the US to 249 this year, it's just no one bothers to count them...

And even Canada regularly has firearm-related multiple murders (in Europe they are rarer, but even there they do happen). The point is not that we shouldn't seriously talk about controlling firearms...

The point is that the media focuses on this particular aspect of gun violence as a way to avoid the broader issues around firearms (and violence) in the US. And in so doing it makes the debate almost meaningless.

Some sports look harder than others. Tennis looks easy - it isn't and TV slows the game down a LOT - but non-players will say things like, "I bet Serena could beat some of the top men" when in fact there are junior boys who would clean her clock.

Dennis Kozlowski went to prison. Sanjay Kumar went to prison. Ira Zar went to prison. Eli Lilly pled guilty and paid $1.4 billion - tough to put a company in prison.

Seeing a trend here?

usually being presented in trials where either side may have reason to emphasize or deemphasize cannabis use (or claim that the abuse did or did not really take place).

In this case, the fact the defendant a) acknowledged use of cannabis prior to the incident; b) has no apparent history of abuse (none is reported, anyway); c) was found guilty after a trial in which a pathologist found evidence of blunt force trauma..

Could it not have been a tragic accident?

I dropped my now-5-y-o when she was a day old. She rolled off my chest. SCARY! But accidental, and I wasn't intoxicated

She turned out fine. But she might not have. What if there had been pot in my system from earlier? Fair to blame it?

I think if you had THC (not THC-COOH) in your system and you had used within the previous few hours, it would be fair to blame cannabis; we would blame alcohol if you'd had a couple of drinks and had a BAC that wasn't negligible, and you might face legal consequences.

Further, these cases aren't being examined by neutral scientists - the evidence is usually being presented in trials where either side may have reason to emphasize or deemphasize cannabis use (or claim that the abuse did or did not really take place).

Yes, and prosecutors would have every reason to embellish the role of cannabis in a death involving negligence. That makes me all the more wary of causation

True. That's why we need a really deep dive into 200 or 500 cases, not just looking at cannabis but at all drugs, ideally with clear rules to define use, intoxication, etc, and examined for confounding variables. Anyway, I'll be interested to see what you make of the book...

Strikes me as an extremely strong fact pattern in favor of a direct link between cannabis use and child abuse in this case; but anyone is welcome to disagree.

As for cannabis and child abuse, we are at a greater disadvantage in making claims of causation because abuse is relatively rare, and cannabis intoxication is only sometimes the only obvious causative factor.

In the absence of a randomized controlled trial (or, preferably, several trials), we depend on other factors to show causation; most and arguably all of those factors are met in the case of cannabis and psychosis.
